The taxes, are they all in?

We had intended to write a little sermonette on the dangers of track walking, but recent events have spared our readers. Actions speak louder than words.

Hornets rushed in where criminals hesitated to tread, and routed our state's attorney at Lyndonville. Now if it had been the Central Vermont railroad, Gates might have served a process on them.

The Times invites consideration of the communication to the Burlington Free Press from E. M. Goddard of the Vermont commission to the Jamestown exposition, in which he gives the version of condition from the standpoint of the commission.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS OLD.

The hundredth birthday of the New Bedford, Mass., Mercury is the occasion for issuing an enlarged edition of that journal and the publishing of a handsome eight-page magazine devoted to the history of The Mercury and the city of New Bedford. The letter of congratulation which Governor Guild of Massachusetts sent to the editor gives perhaps the best commendation which could be wished for. Gov. Guild wrote: "It is pleasant to remember that not only in the case of The Mercury, but in certain other notable instances in Massachusetts, it has been found that sensationalism, misrepresentation and the subordination of important events to exciting occurrences do not tend to the long life and well-being of a newspaper. The best paying newspaper properties in the Commonwealth have in the long run been those which, like The Mercury, have sought to maintain a standard of morality and decency in the news columns and advertising columns, as well as on the editorial page." The Mercury is indeed to be congratulated.

BETTER RELATIONS ALREADY.

When the Barre and Montpelier electric railroad was sold (that is, the majority holdings) to three Montpelier men, The Times took occasion to state that there would probably be a much more satisfactory condition of affairs in a short time. The expectation has already been realized, in a measure, in the changed attitude which the company is taking toward the people of Barre and Montpelier. It is no longer a position of antagonism which is held, but rather one of liberality toward its patrons and the two cities which granted the right to operate within the city limits. The company has shown a disposition to be considerate of the wishes of the people of the two cities insofar as it was possible; and so long as that attitude is maintained the company need not expect the two cities to ask anything that is unreasonable or impracticable. As soon as feasible, changes have been made, and it is safe to assume that other changes will be forthcoming. What The Times considers as one of the possibilities is the extension of the South Main street branch of the road to the city line, at least, to the south. There has been a demand for the extension for several years, but it has fallen upon deaf ears heretofore, and the city government has not taken the steps which might force the company to lay the extension. Under the new regime, we may expect better things in due course, without resort to legal methods.

LIQUOR SELLING BY PROXY.

It seems to be a mixed-up and altogether unsatisfactory condition of affairs in relation to the holding of a certain liquor license in Rutland. Press reports have it that a license was granted to a name, is managed by another man and the proceeds got to a third. If investigations should prove the assertions to be true, it is no more than right that the license be revoked. The opportunity to cover up the ownership of a saloon is what the license, local option law is intended to thwart. It is the open and above-board sale of liquor that is intended, no hiding behind the skirts in a kitchen bar-room, no sneaking evasion. Hence it is a perversion of the intent of the law when one man who perhaps thinks he had a better chance of securing a license by applying in another man's name, does so and secures the privilege. The very granting of a liquor license carries with it the option of giving the privilege to sell to those considered best fitted for the business. If the license commissioners thought they were granting the license to a certain man whom they considered fit and found later that the man had little or no connection with the license, then there would be fraud. This matter in Rutland ought to be looked into to determine the truth or falsity of the assertions.

The Old and The New.

Old time trouble,
Gilt out of the way.
New trouble comin'
With the breakin' o' day
No use diggin'
In the ashes gray,
When you've got to fight the fire
At the breakin' o' the day!

Old time trouble—
Don't you come to stay
When brand-new trouble's
Takin' all the way!
Strength for to fight it
With a "hip-hooray!"
Is what 'we're g-waitin'
At the breakin' o' the day!

OH, I GOT MINE, ALL RIGHT.

Along the crowded bench I sit
And dream to beat the band.
My heart is full of awful chimes,
My eyes of flinty sand.

The ice cream man-off touched my roll,
The soda fountain played,
Last year when Mabel sat with me
Beneath the bamboo shade.

The same sweet thirst is on me now,
The same small store of cash;
But Mabel doesn't look my way,
She has another man.

I sit alone and only hear
The number twenty-three,
And sickening thuds that seem to float
From out the lemon trees.

VERMONT AT JAMESTOWN.

E. M. Goddard of the Commission Writes About the Conditions.

In a letter to the Burlington Free Press, E. M. Goddard of Montpelier writes concerning the Vermont representation at Jamestown as follows:
To the Editor of the Free Press:

There has recently appeared in some Vermont papers articles regarding the Jamestown exposition, especially referring to the Vermont building and exhibits. As a member of the Vermont commission to the Jamestown exposition, and being located here in charge of the Vermont building and looking after the installation of the various exhibits, I feel that it is my duty to refute certain statements and reports that have been circulated in relation to the part Vermont has taken in the exposition.

It is true that there have been delays and difficulties in getting our exhibits in place, but the showing that has been made is a creditable one and the results obtained are fully as good, if not better, than those of any state having a similar appropriation. The state building is satisfactory in every particular, and persons visiting the building praise it very highly and speak in glowing terms of its many attractive features. Its location is ideal and the general style of the structure cannot fail to charm any person who sees it. The building is open to visitors every day and there is always someone present to welcome them. It is not true that Vermont's granite, slate and marble products are not properly represented, for in the mines building the commission has installed an exhibit that attracts much attention and which shows in attractive form the principal quarry products of the state. Because a person visiting the exposition failed to locate this exhibit should not be made an excuse for saying that Vermont's quarry products have been left without representation here.

If there is any person ashamed to acknowledge that he is from the Green Mountain state because of what the state has done at the exposition, I can only say that either that person lacks the ordinary powers of observation or else he deliberately misrepresents conditions as they actually exist. The exposition is worthy of the patronage of all the people. The attendance is increasing daily, the exhibits and state buildings are most interesting, and I trust that all who can do so will avail themselves of the opportunity that will be given them to be present here on Vermont day, September 15th, for which an interesting programme has been prepared, the details of which will be given to the press at an early day. Everyone will receive a cordial welcome at the Vermont building and can see and judge for themselves of the work that has been done, rather than rely on misleading statements made by persons who do not take the time to locate all of the interesting exhibits installed by the state commission. Yours very truly,
Edward M. Goddard.

DOYLE AS SHERLOCK HOLMES.

When Conan Doyle gets on the train
He'll take the earth with fine tooth combs.
He'll run down bad men without fail,
And nab each criminal that roams.
Hie, there!
Beware
The man who trained up Sherlock Holmes.

He'll catch the burglar in the act.
Of burbling in the king's preserves.
And straightway will that wretch be packed.
To get the sentence he deserves.
O sent!

What's that?
This slouch will spoil each criminal's nerves.

He'll trace all clues so skillfully
All desperate men will sue for peace;
So swiftly and unerring
The word will need no more police.
No swag
In bag—
When Doyle's at work all crime must cease!
